Edith Cowan University (ECU) is a large Western Australian University with nearly 24,000 students and staff across two Perth metropolitan campuses and a campus at Bunbury. The University consumes a significant amount of water and over the last few years has been implementing strategies to reduce this high level of consumption. One of the key initiatives has been the introduction of waterless urinals.

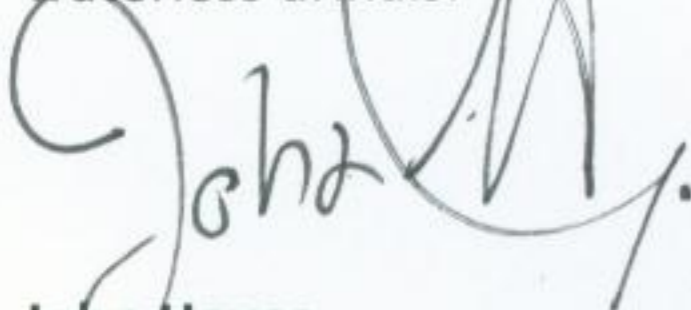

ECU trialed both the URIMAT Australia Waterless Urinal and the microbial waterless urinal cube before deciding that the URIMAT best suited its needs. Since that decision ECU has been progressively converting wall hung urinals to URIMATS. Furthermore it has included in the design brief for all new buildings and refurbishments a requirement to provide URIMATS. Currently there about 50 Urimats installed in various buildings.

The feedback from staff and students has been very positive towards the URIMATs and to date the University has had no complaints about their use. Cleaning of URIMATS is simple and easily undertaken by the University's cleaning contractor.

URIMAT Australia's local staff have provided a very good service to ECU and have demonstrated a willingness to ensure their product performs as designed and any issues are promptly attended to. They also appear to have a very proactive research and development team who look at ways to improve the URIMAT and advance its application to other types of urinals, for example stainless steel troughs.

The changeover to URIMAT waterless urinals has provided large savings in water usage as a result of not needing to regularly flush the urinals and this water saving is contributing to one of ECU's key objectives of environmental sustainability.

Please feel free to contact the undersigned if you wish to discuss the ECU experience with URIMAT waterless urinals.
